KEY TAKEAWAYS

Many girls in India are married at a young age and drop out of school after they complete their primary education due to societal pressures or early pregnancies.

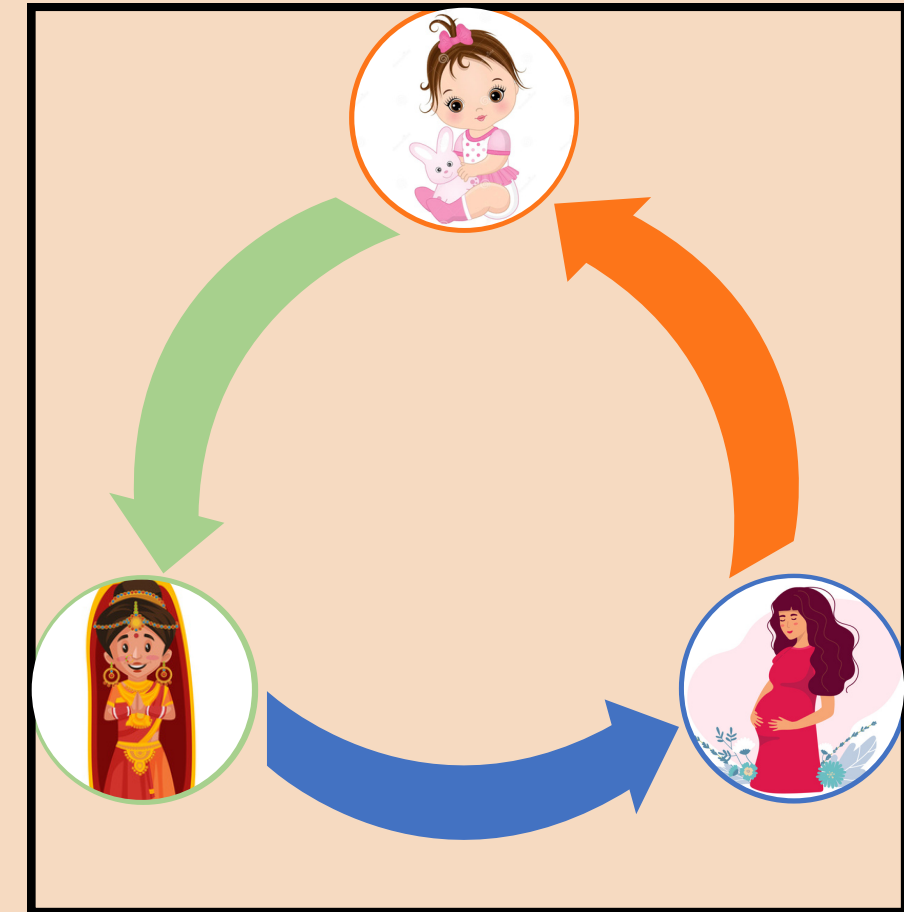

Child labor and lack of feminine hygiene products keep girls from coming to school, and contribute to the literacy rates and continuous lack of education.

RESULTS

As girls remain uneducated, it is more difficult to enter the workforce, and consequently women find themselves in difficult financial situations.

As mothers in India remain uneducated, they negatively impact the education of their children thus, the educational disparities have become a cyclical, intergenerational issue

HOW INDIA HAS GROWN IN PROVIDING EDUCATION TO GIRLS

While literacy rates for Indian girls remain comparably low when compared with its neighbouring countries like China, there has been an overall increase in literacy throughout India due to government schemes and efforts, with rates increasing from 40.7% in 1981 to 74.37% in 2018. In 1981, literacy rates for women were at 25%, as compared to 55% for men. Due to significant steps taken by the Indian government to improve education, the gap has decreased significantly since the 80s. However, the literacy gap still continues to exist and varies across different regions, especially rural and urban areas.
